University Hosts Groundbreaking For Conference Center & Hotel

Auburn University, the City of Auburn, and the Algernon Blair Group, Inc., celebrated the long-awaited groundbreaking for the new hotel and conference center on Jan. 26. The facility will include a 250-room hotel with an adjoining 35,000 square-foot conference center across from the campus on South College Street.

Despite its occurring on the coldest day of the year, the groundbreaking brought a crowd exceeding the seats under the tent providing some refuge from the cold wind. The ceremonies also marked Gov. Guy Hunt's first activity as the chairman of the Auburn Board of Trustees. Participating in the ceremony along with Gov. Hunt were James M. Adams, III, president of Algernon Blair Group, Inc., of Montgomery; President James E. Martin '54; Mayor Jan Dempsey of the City of Auburn; and State Treasurer George C. Wallace, Jr.

Some two years in the planning stages, the hotel and conference center will be completed in approximately 18 months and begin operation in the summer of 1988. The conference center will be named in honor of Charles and Thelma Dixon, benefactors of the university on several occasions.

The funding of the conference center and hotel is the result of a financial coalition involving federal, state, city, private, and university funds. Each of the participants on the program spoke of the positive financial impact on the local region that the hotel and conference center would bring, while President Martin and Gov. Hunt stressed the educational advantages and, in time, the financial influence on the state of having such facilities at Auburn.

The groundbreaking marked the beginning of the final stage of a major goal for Dr. Martin as president of Auburn University, a conference center suitable for hosting continuing education and public service programs. "This new complex will mean a great deal to a number of our programs," Dr. Martin noted, "especially our continuing education and public service efforts." Auburn frequently hosts conferences and short courses away from campus because of lack of facilities and hotel accommodations.

The agreement with the Montgomery-based Algernon Blair Group, Inc., calls for the university to provide a long-term lease for the site with construction to be funded from private sources as well as state and federally-backed bonds. The developers will operate the hotel, with the university leasing and operating the conference center.

Library Fund Drive Slightly Ahead Of Schedule

The $5 million fund drive to help finance the expansion of the Ralph Brown Draughon Library ended 1986 ahead of schedule with gifts and pledges of $3,204,304. The goal for the end of 1986 was $3 million. The library fund drive is the top priority for the university Development Office, which seeks the full $5 million by the end of 1988.

The library fund drive started with a $1 million pledge from the Athletic Department, and Athletic Director Pat Dye has been active in working with the Alumni & Development Office in seeking gifts. Other major gifts include $1 million committed by the Callaway Foundation of LaGrange, Ga.; $190,200 from First Alabama Bank of Montgomery; $153,850 from Buffalo Rock Co.; $150,000 from the Daniel Foundation; $100,000 from the Algernon Blair Group, Inc.; and an undisclosed amount from EBSCO Industries, Inc. In addition, eleven donors have made gifts of $10,000 or more.

The Development Office hopes to raise an additional $1 million by the end of 1987, and Executive Director of Alumni & Development Jerry F. Smith '64 says the drive needs every pledge it can get. "A library fund drive is difficult because a library doesn't have any graduates. However, alumni in every field should support the library as it sustains all disciplines."

The $5 million for the fund drive will be added to $5 million from the state education bond issue of 1985 as well as $8 million from a university bond issue in order to build an $18 million structure which will approximately double the size of the present library. Groundbreaking is tentatively set for next fall with completion scheduled for fall 1989.

GROUNDBREAKING—The weather may have been cold, but the smiles were warm at the official groundbreaking for Auburn's new hotel and conference center to be located on South College Street across from the campus. Scholarship Money To Become Available If Proposal Passes Millions of dollars eventually may be added to Auburn's scholarship funds if a proposed special license tag bill is adopted by the Legislature.

Auburn University President James Martin suggested that each four-year institution in Alabama select a symbol to be printed on automobile tags which car owners could elect to purchase for an additional $25-50 each year.

If just half of the approximately 60,000 alumni in the state paid $25 for the privilege of displaying an Auburn symbol, $750,000 would be raised and put to use in the form of scholarships, explains Executive Vice President Dr. George H. Emert.

"State Rep. James Campbell has drafted a bill," Dr. Emert said. "Basically what happened was that we're struggling to find new sources of funds for our scholarships. Georgia has something similar to what we've suggested except their money goes into state coffers instead of the schools. The proposal Dr. Martin made stipulates the money would go to the institution whose logo appears on each license plate."

The money raised by each four-year school is to provide assistance for enrolled college students. Auburn only has five full scholarships currently available. With tuition increases and cutbacks in federal funding available for college fellowships, loans, and grants, the tag income would provide another source of funding for bright students. The money is optional and not an additional tax.

'Normal' Class Attendance Now Mandatory for All Athletes

Although the university does not have a mandatory attendance requirement, the controversy over whether or not athletes should be in class regularly if they are to be allowed to participate in their sport has resulted in a resolution by the Faculty Senate as well as a recommendation from the University's Committee on Intercollegiate Athletics.

The controversy arose over Brent Fullwood's continuing to play after he missed most of his classes for the last several weeks of fall quarter after being ill and having family problems. Although he broke no NCAA or SEC rules, Athletic Director Pat Dye has been criticized for allowing Fullwood to continue to play.

Auburn's previous policy regarding athletic participation included monitoring freshmen, sophomore, and junior athletes for class attendance but not seniors who were assumed to be mature enough to attend class regularly. Under the new policy proposed by the Athletic Department to the Committee on Intercollegiate Athletics and recommended to the university administration, each player, no matter what his classification, is required to maintain "normal class attendance" for at least 12 hours of coursework when participating in a sport. Because Auburn doesn't have a mandatory attendance requirement, each instructor determines attendance rules for his class.

Dr. Joe Boland, an electrical engineering professor who chairs the Committee on Intercollegiate Activities, explains that while allowing a student to play who seldom attends class was not against any SEC or NCAA rules, it was "counter to the spirit of the rules and generated considerable negative publicity for Auburn University." The new policy, he explains, should prevent a similar situation from happening again and "actually puts student athletes under greater scrutiny than non-athletes regarding classroom attendance."

Computerized Check-out Drawing Near

Checking out a book at Ralph Draughon Library will soon be as easy as tallying up a food order at a local supermarket, according to assistant university librarian Bobby Holloway. Originally scheduled to start last fall, the only remaining holdup is getting barcodes on faculty and student IDs. Mr. Holloway explained that the personnel service will be mailing codes to each faculty and staff member this month, while the library will attach the codes to student IDs the first time they want to check out books. Most of the books purchased since 1975 have been bar-coded on the inside, meaning that a small piece of paper, similar to the lines seen on many of today's magazines, food products, and other items processed by computer, has been glued to the books in preparation for the day when librarians simply have to run a scanner over them and students won't have to fill out a card for each book they wish to check out.

"We're in the testing stage right now," fellow librarian Sherida Downer said. "We accomplished much this summer with lots of good help from students. I'd say about two-thirds of the books have been coded. And even though we check out an average of 1,200-1,500 books daily, I have a feeling that number will increase when the new system is implemented. I've seen people come to the desk with several armloads of books and be overwhelmed at the time it takes to fill out all the cards for the material they want and then leave some behind because of the time it takes to fill them out. With the new scanner, it'll take only a few seconds to process everything."

"Automation is a slow deal," Mr. Holloway said. "The Atlanta firm that's handling much of the computerization of the books was amazed at the amount of work we had accomplished in the time we did. It's going to be a matter of getting everyone together in the university to agree on details on how the system should be set up and when all the massive amount of work on the books can be done."

Eagle Handlers Seek $2,500 to Repair Cage

Members of Alpha Phi Omega, the service fraternity which cares for the White Eagle, are launching a drive for $2,500 to replace one of the large poles which supports the wire cage in which the golden eagle is housed.

"The pole at the northeast corner of the aviary has been bowing for some time," said Bart Winkler, head trainer, "but in the last few days the bowing has increased." An engineering professor who checked the pole for the fraternity says it needs to be replaced immediately.

A Phi O is responsible for expenses for caring for the mascot and maintaining the cage. Income from a small trust fund set up from money raised earlier helps meet some of the costs as do receipts from various donations and the fraternity's projects during football season. However, there are no funds for capital expenses such as the new pole. "A Phi O and W Eagle VI will appreciate donations in any amount," said Bart.

Alumni can make gifts to help replace the pole or to support War Eagle VI through the Auburn University Foundation. Checks should be made to the Auburn University Foundation and designated for the War Eagle VI Fund.

Black History Month Activities Include College Bowl, Poet Nikki Giovanni & Lecture on Black WWII Pilots

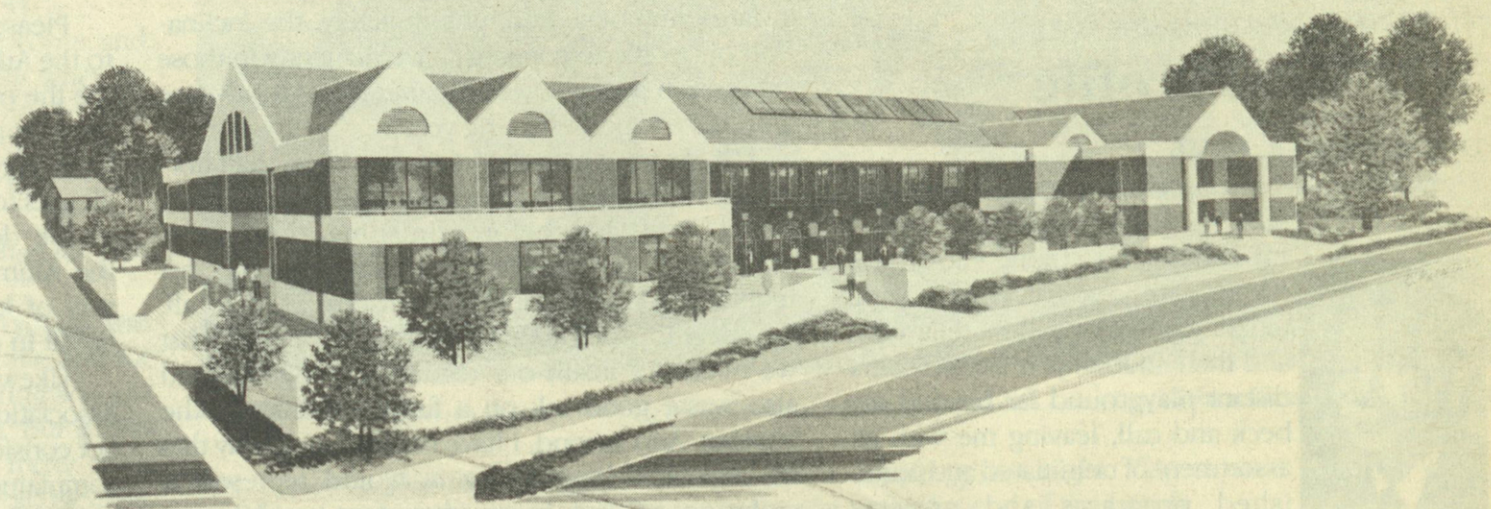

A variety of activities in observance of Black History Month range from an art exhibit through a tour of the George Washington Carver Museum. Auburn students will be performing in a number of activities including a variety show, a free jazz concert, a gospel choir concert, and a college bowl based on facts in black history.

Poet Nikki Giovanni will come to campus for a reading of her works on Feb. 17 in the Union Ballroom.

On Feb. 26, Jeff Jakeman, a history doctoral candidate, will talk about the contributions of black airmen who served in the Air Force during World War II and were trained at Tuskegee.

Auburn Opera Presents Two Comedies in English March 26-29

same setting, a drugstore. The operas, which will be sung in English, have been cast by new opera director Bruce Hall using both graduate and undergraduate voice majors from within the Music Department. The opera chorus will be made up of Auburn students and members of the community. The orchestra will use professional musicians. Auburn National Bank is sponsoring the 1987 production through a grant to the Music Department.

Haydn's The Apothecary centers around an older pharmacist, who, when he's not dreaming of far-off lands, concentrates on trying to woo the young Grilletta into marriage. The plot thickens when two young suitors scheme to trick the old man, disguising themselves as exotic foreigners in order to win Grilletta for themselves. The Nightbell also involves an older pharmacist who has just married a young girl of the village. Her handsome ex-boyfriend schemes to throw the marriage into chaos.

Tickets are $5 ($8.50 for the premiere performance and reception) and are available through the Telfair Peet Theatre box office (205) 826-4154.

Nominees Sought For Humanities Alumni Achievement Award

Each spring the Auburn University Humanities Foundation honors an alumnus who is distinguished for his or her achievement in the humanities. The committee which makes this award is asking that alumni send names of graduates whom they consider worthy of consideration.

Dr. Robert R. Rea, chairman of the Alumni Awards Committee of the Humanities Endowment Fund, explains that achievement in the humanities can take many forms. "It should bear some relationship to the varied interests of the academic fields of English, history, political science, journalism, sociology, religion, philosophy or foreign languages and literature but may rise above any formal limitations. The recipient need not even be a graduate of the present College of Liberal Arts and its departments."

Past recipients of the award include John C. Godbold '40, jurist; Neil O. Davis '35, editor and publisher; Warren W. Rogers '50, professor; Anne Rivers Siddons '58, novelist; Paul Hemphill '59, journalist; and James Patrick '56, architect, theologian, and philosopher.

To nominate an alumnus for the award, please submit his or her name along with a current address and a statement of the nominee's accomplishments for further investigation. The selection committee will hold all correspondence confidential but may request further information from nominees. Send nominations to Dr. Robert R. Rea, History Department, Auburn University, AL 36849.

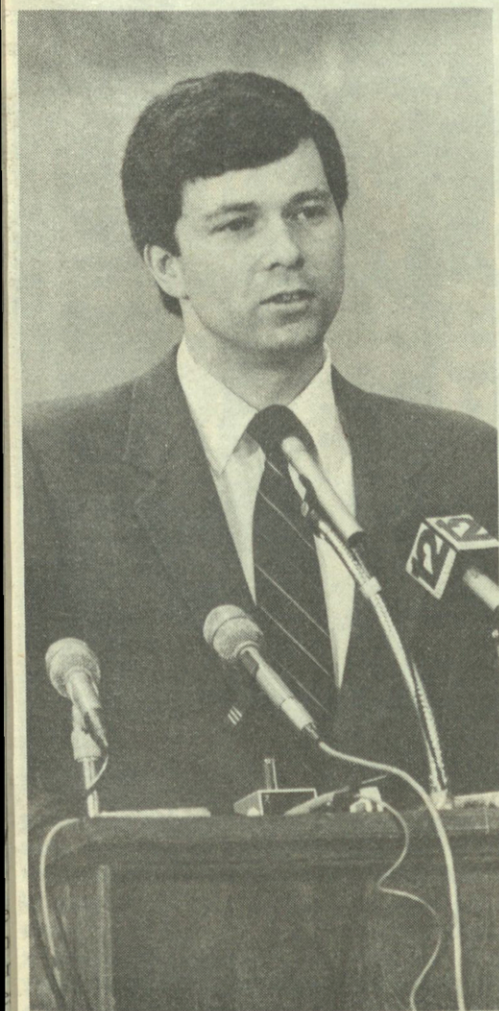

Faculty Notes

Dr. J. David Irwin '61, head of the Department of Electrical Engineering at Auburn, has been named recipient of the

Anthony J. Hornfeck Service Award of the Industrial Electronic Society, which has more than 5,000 members worldwide. Dr. Irwin received the award "in grateful recognition of his unequalled and dedicated service as president of the society, as editor of the society's transactions, and for his invaluable service as a member of the society's administrative committee."

William R. Gwin '67, professor in the Department of Architecture, has been named a research associate at the Martin Centre for Architectural and Urban Studies at Cambridge University in Cambridge, England, where he will spend spring quarter.

D. Gary Swanson, Alumni Professor of Physics, has been named a Fellow of the American Physical Society in recognition of his research contributions. Dr. Swanson recently presented papers on his research at the International Conference on Plasma (Continued on page 7)

Here and There—

A Limited Profile

By Jerry Roden, Jr. '46

Like a mischievous child, the year nineteen hundred and eighty-six gamboled in and around my habitation just long enough for me to become accustomed to it and to gain confidence in its reliability, and then suddenly, it fled to some distant playground far beyond my beck and call, leaving me with an assortment of uninitiated and unfinished programs and projects planned precisely for the year that was no more.

Roden

Although no other year in my memory has behaved quite so capriciously, I should have been more alert to the possibility of that sudden and traumatic abandonment, for all of the years of late have displayed a decided tendency to arrive unexpectedly and depart more and more hastily, manifesting none of the solidly predictable lengthiness which I learned to associate with years back in the days of my youth, when I first became acquainted with them.

Furthermore, in the four short days it has been around already, nineteen hundred and eighty-seven has displayed some disturbing tendencies. Unlike its predecessor, it manifests no childlike qualities, but exhibits instead a stern adult demeanor and moves along at such precise and business-like pace that one scarcely dares reckon how swiftly it will pass, unless we discover some way to retard the rate of its inexorable march.

Unfortunately, I find myself lacking any qualification whatsoever for developing a time-slowing methodology. My accustomed approach to time utilization has been to commit myself to twice what I could accomplish and then, upon realizing what I had done, to rush madly from pillar to post with no clearly formulated plan of attack, hoping irrationally that the sheer force of exploding energy would accomplish the impossible set of tasks accepted.

The most significant results of my customary methods of managing fleeting time are ulcers and an interminable list of uncompleted commitments, unanswered letters, and neglected assignments. I would blush to unburden myself in public of material which more properly belongs in a confessional, except for the fact that we are establishing here a general profile of the "thou shalt not" for utilizing the transient years speeding by in more and more rapid succession.

And, even though we have spoken only of my approach and its results, I daresay that we have established a "thou shalt not" profile with extensive application in our contemporary world. For, over and over again, especially in places where people assemble in large numbers, we see the pattern of easy assent to any proposal for acting and of unrestrained haste to fulfill impossible commitments. A goodly portion of the world's population seems bent upon accelerating rather than retarding the pace of fleeting time.

We have noted already that this tendency occurs most frequently in places where people assemble in large numbers. And, unfortunately, the inclination of people to congregate permanently in those overgrown beehives we call cities seems to advance with the tempo of fleeting years.

I began sketching the foregoing "thou shalt not" profile with the full intention of filling in every detail explicitly before finishing this piece. However, I now find it appropriate to forego that intention for two important reasons: First of all, the specific prohibitions are so clearly implied that we need not insult our readers' intelligence and also waste good ink on a futile detailing of the obvious. And second, I have realized suddenly that all of that tedious filling in would represent a violation of the most important prohibition implied.

And so without further ado, we bid you a leisurely happy new year.

Notes on Donor Listing

If your name was missing from the listing in the January Alumnews, and you think you should have been included, please check to see if your gift was made during the fiscal year—i.e. October 1, 1985-September 30, 1986. If it was, and you weren't listed, drop us a note so we can determine what went wrong with our system and make the necessary corrections. If you made your gift after September 30, you'll be listed in The Alumnews next January when we acknowledge donors during the current fiscal year.

Please remember that we only list gifts made to the Auburn University Foundation, because these are the only ones for which we in the Alumni and Development Office have records. The Auburn University Foundation was set up in 1960 to receive all gifts to the university. If you made a gift directly to the department or school instead of through the Alumni & Development Office, we have no way of knowing about your gift and giving you credit in our records.

Likewise, your dues to the Auburn Alumni Association are not tax-deductible and therefore not considered gifts to the university. One alumna complained that, for the third straight year, he'd been left out of the listing of donors, and he was a dues payer. He sent us a copy of his membership card to prove to us how we had erred. But we hadn't. Dues to the Association are not gifts to the university. As necessary as we members are to the running of the Alumni & Development Office (our support enables staff members to work for the university's various programs and projects, send out Annual Giving mailings, pay for the computer system, etc.) our dues don't count as gifts to the university with the IRS.

And one final note: If you are an alumnus and happened to be listed in the January issue as a friend, please let us know. For some reason our computer has enthusiastically increased our number of friends by adding some alumni in that category when they made a gift, and providing their names in the friend listing rather than with the class year.

When Football Was Fall Sport

By Bob Sanders '52

The football season starts earlier and ends later every year. It's almost reached the stage where it would simplify matters to just officially start the season January 1 and end it December 31.

Football people, just as baseball people and basketball people, never seem to know when to leave a good thing alone. They keep trying to milk a little more and a little more out of it; so now the Super Bowl is barely over in time for the first high school games.

I am ancient enough to remember when football was a fall sport.

They had lights at the old field (which was also used for baseball in the summertime and for softball and every other kind of PE during school) by the time I "went out," as we said, but it was still a pretty crude affair, with bald, rocky areas that doubly inspired ball carriers to avoid tacklers, nothing like the modern, lushly grassed (semi-bowls) where modern Lamar County High School Bulldogs and most other high school footballers play.

And it wasn't too long before my time that all the games were played on Friday afternoons, out there across the artesian well drainage ditch from the main school yard.

I was talking to my brother-in-law about the old days of high school football the other day. My son asked him if he was a "star" player back then and Elwin modestly said, naw, he was just a player. But he really was pretty much of a local star, a fleet halfback back when the standard formation was the old Notre Dame box.

Recruiting of high school players from other schools is nothing new. The reason Frosty is from my home town is because, way back there in the dim past, some people went up to that next town up the road, the hated rival above all hated rivals, a place that later produced Joe Cribbs, incidentally, and, with grandiose offers of a job and other benefits, induced my father-in-law to move, providing, of course, that he brought his son along with him.

Elwin tells about the time he got in his first game, in the eighth grade, at that other town. The coach was Joe Acee, now something of a legend in that area. You'd get close to the coach as you could on the bench, if you wanted to play, Elwin says, and pat him on the knee and say, "Think of me, think of me," urging him to send you in.

And finally they built up a big enough lead that the coach did send him in, and he went tearing out there and put on the other guy's helmet (they only had eleven helmets), which swallowed him up, and told them the coach said for him to carry the ball, which he hadn't, and the center snapped it straight back to him (as they did then) and he fumbled it and it went straight up and the other team covered it and he was yanked out forthwith.

And the next time he patted the coach, that revered personage said, "I thought of you before, and look what happened."

But he still managed to get in enough games to show his potential and get lured to my hometown, where he subsequently played alongside cousin Charlie and cousin J.M. (before a truck ran over him and broke his leg) and Perch Dees and Brooks Jones and Fred Mills and all that crowd.

One of the memorable events of his career was the time they went to Florence to play Coffee High, a total mismatch, of course, something like, say,

OUT OF THE PAST Senior Class Football Team 1908

Lee Academy playing Jeff Davis. But, the school would get a whole hundred dollars for playing the game, and in 1938 a chance for a school system to pick up a hundred dollars was not to be fumbled.

Elwin says it was a night game, and that was the first time he'd ever seen lights at a football field.

It was also the first time he'd ever seen a band at a football game. And Coffee had 70-something players dressed out; our team had a total of 23.

Also, Coffee was not only a relatively huge school, it was an outstandingly good one, even for its class, with some seven or so players at least honorably-mentioned on the all-state team that year.

The troops were fed a supper of toast, he says, since the coach didn't want their nervous bellies to be overly full; but some of them said, heck, they wanted something to eat, so they snuck off and got some hamburgers.

The slaughter could have been worse. Out there under the blazing lights, with the strange blaring of the band assaulting their country ears and with the comparatively vast, hostile crowd roaring intimidatingly, they acquitted themselves rather well, only getting beat by a 38-7 score, or something like that.

But it was rough. There was not much kneepatting that night. Players came out and went to the far end of the bench.

Elwin says one of his fellow backs, a fellow named Hicks, whose unique face I faintly remember, said, after being ground into the dirt repeatedly, "Get me outta here, I got to rest. Let some of them scrubs get a chance to play. They need the experience...."

Jazz Professor Excited About New Degree

By William Thomley '87

Thirty-two feet tap the classroom floor in rhythm while the frantic sounds of one of Woody Herman's herds leap from stereo speakers. "Listen!" The feet stop. "Did you hear that?" The teacher backs up the needle on the record and the students listen more intently. "You know, that reminds me of the time I was playing with...."

Just as the sounds of jazz pervade in his classroom, the tools of Bob Richardson's chosen profession fill his smoke-filled office in Goodwin Hall. Cassette tapes of jazz greats Louis Armstrong, Count Basie, and Charlie Parker clutter the associate professor's desk. Reams of sheet music are stacked on the floor by the walls. An old phonograph also occupies the floor, next to a well-used practice piano which seems to be the focus of the office. Students constantly come and go, and Mr. Richardson takes time to talk to each one. This quality of communication brings him admiration from his students.

"Mr. Richardson is an excellent teacher because of experience," says Lynne Woodlief, a junior in finance who has taken his "History of Jazz" class. "His practical knowledge makes what he teaches in class more vivid. He gives you a much greater appreciation for talent because of his enthusiasm and love for the music." She says she will always remember the class because Mr. Richardson "made it fun. So I listened—and learned."

Born in Decatur, Ga., in 1928, he attended Davidson College, a Presbyterian school near Charlotte, N.C., for two years during the Forties. When not in school, he could be found playing bass in the Atlanta jazz clubs. His musical talent brought him to Auburn in 1947. "I was going back to Davidson for a third year when I learned that the Auburn Knights were in need of a bass player, so I jumped at the opportunity."

Mr. Richardson played bass with the Auburn Knights while he attended Auburn, from 1947 to 1950. He obtained a bachelor's degree in education in 1950, majoring in string bass. He served in the military from 1951 to 1953, as a member of the 8th Division Army jazz band. "I was in charge of getting people into the band," he says. "There were 250 musicians in the band. The experience was very good. I played with some first-class jazz players." After the service, he changed his main instrument to piano and worked the jazz club circuit in Atlanta. "I played in all those clubs that have since been torn down," he says with a sad smile. He returned to Auburn, rejoined the Auburn Knights, and received a master's degree in education in 1957. "Playing a lot all the time," he taught at Auburn until 1964, when he went out on the road.

"Most of what I've learned is OJT—on-the-job training," he says, adding that he's played with excellent musicians, but none who are well-known.

"I played in jazz clubs from New Orleans to Tampa...all along the Gulf Coast. I spent my happiest days playing with 'Mike Serpas and the Sons of the Beach' at Gus Stevens' Club in Biloxi, Miss. Mike was from New Orleans and had played with Pete Fountain [a famous jazz clarinet player]. Mike was the greatest trumpet player to put trumpet to chops," Mr. Richardson says with a wide smile. "Seven nights a week listening to Mike Serpas was like paradise."

There are other musicians for whom Mr. Richardson has high regard. Rick Bell '58, "an Auburn grad and the world's greatest jazz tenor saxophone player," worked with Mr. Richardson in the Auburn Knights in the mid-Fifties. "And I was fortunate enough to play many nights with the greatest jazz clarinetist, Carol Cunningham."

Mr. Richardson returned to Auburn in 1975 as an assistant professor of music. He became an associate professor in 1982. He is excited about a new curriculum the Music Department is offering this fall. For the first time in the history of the university, music students can get a degree in jazz. "The new courses we're offering are: jazz in theory and practice, jazz piano, jazz repertoire, jazz masterworks, jazz improvising, and, of course, jazz ensemble."

Because of the newness of the program and because most of the jazz courses require more than a fundamental knowledge of music, "we only have a few [students] in it now," he says. Music students take a core curriculum their first two years before moving into specialized areas. Mr. Richardson is confident that interest in the program will pick up as soon as more students and alumni learn of it. "It certainly should benefit the Department," he says. "These jazz courses are excellent music courses—good for any student interested in learning about music. We hope we will build the Department in numbers. It's a good music education," he adds.

This giant step toward improving music education in Auburn does, however, have its drawbacks for Mr. Richardson. One thing is less free time. "I teach a busy schedule," he says. "This quarter I'm teaching masterworks, repertoire, jazz piano, a beginning piano class, theory and practice, improvising, and history of jazz." He also teaches several private students in applied music lessons. "I wish I had a chance to do more playing. I practice every chance I get." He adds that he still performs "on occasion. Some Saturdays I play at Saugahatchee Country Club. I'll play a concert this year. I look at myself as being a performer."

Mr. Richardson is also a published composer of big band arrangements. "But," he says, "I would rather play with small combos." He feels that the best playing comes from more intimate and informal sessions.

Another musical endeavor that Mr. Richardson directs is "The Auburn University Yardbird Orchestra," another name for the jazz ensemble. "The Birds," as he calls them, have an informal jam session every Wednesday night at 8 p.m. at Denaro's Restaurant and Lounge in Auburn. "I've played hooky lately [from the sessions] because I've recently moved up to Lake Martin, so I'm not in town much on the weeknights."

An avid sports fan, Mr. Richardson lists baseball [he has an Atlanta Braves tag on the front of his car] and fishing as his favorites. He admits he doesn't fish as much as he'd like. "I live on the lake and should fish more. I'm in a contest to catch the largest spotted bass this year, and I've yet to come up with an entry."

But most of all, Mr. Richardson says, "I enjoy teaching. I like being able to explain to students in the classroom in 10 minutes something that took me years to learn out on the road."

Political Science GTA Stresses Education For Civic Awareness

By Tomie Dugas '72

Tacked to the wall above his desk in the small Haley Center office that Alfred Davis shares with another graduate student is a vintage Doonesbury comic strip—one that has found favor among a number of Auburn professors. Within its yellowed frames, a professor pontificating in academic jargon receives the unexpected—a breakthrough—a student response!

A Doonesbury aficionado, Mr. Davis, who is also a graduate teaching assistant in the Political Science Department, likes the cartoon strip because of its penchant for confronting controversial issues—particularly political ones.

And likewise, Mr. Davis does not shy away from debating such topics in the American state and local government course that he teaches. In fact, he welcomes animated discussion. "I don't mind touching on controversial issues," he says, "because I think that the role of the university is to make students think and explore topics that they would not normally explore."

The text used for the course, the 5th edition of Thomas Dye's Politics in States and Communities, devotes an entire chapter to the civil rights movement. The author does a "somewhat adequate job" of presenting the subject in Mr. Davis' opinion. Assessing student reaction to the chapter, he comments, "I think that the students want to know more about it—about the black struggle. I just don't think that anyone has ever taught them." Mr. Davis admits that the general curriculum for most Auburn students affords little opportunity to discuss black history.

He finds his students' desire to delve deeper into the topic gratifying in light of the indifference that many Auburn students exhibit toward the black minority in their daily lives. Many are surprised at what they learn in his class, not having given any thought before to the problems that black students face at Auburn. As a extreme example, Mr. Davis relates the experiences of Harold Franklin, the first black student to attend Auburn. He describes the loneliness that Franklin encountered as the sole inhabitant of a wing of Magnolia Hall and as a visitor to the cafeteria, isolated in a section that was vacated as soon as he walked in.

Not unexpectedly, Mr. Davis has found some students who would like to maintain the status quo. Some of these are "just not quite aware because they've never had the opportunity to interact with black students and teachers. So they come here somewhat ignorant of what it's like," he says, "and with all those myths and thoughts in their minds of what it's like to go to school with blacks and be taught by a black professor."

Mr. Davis did encounter some animosity when he first began teaching, but "after the first quarter, students knew that I was black before they took my class, so they came in with an idea of who I was and what my teaching habits were like."

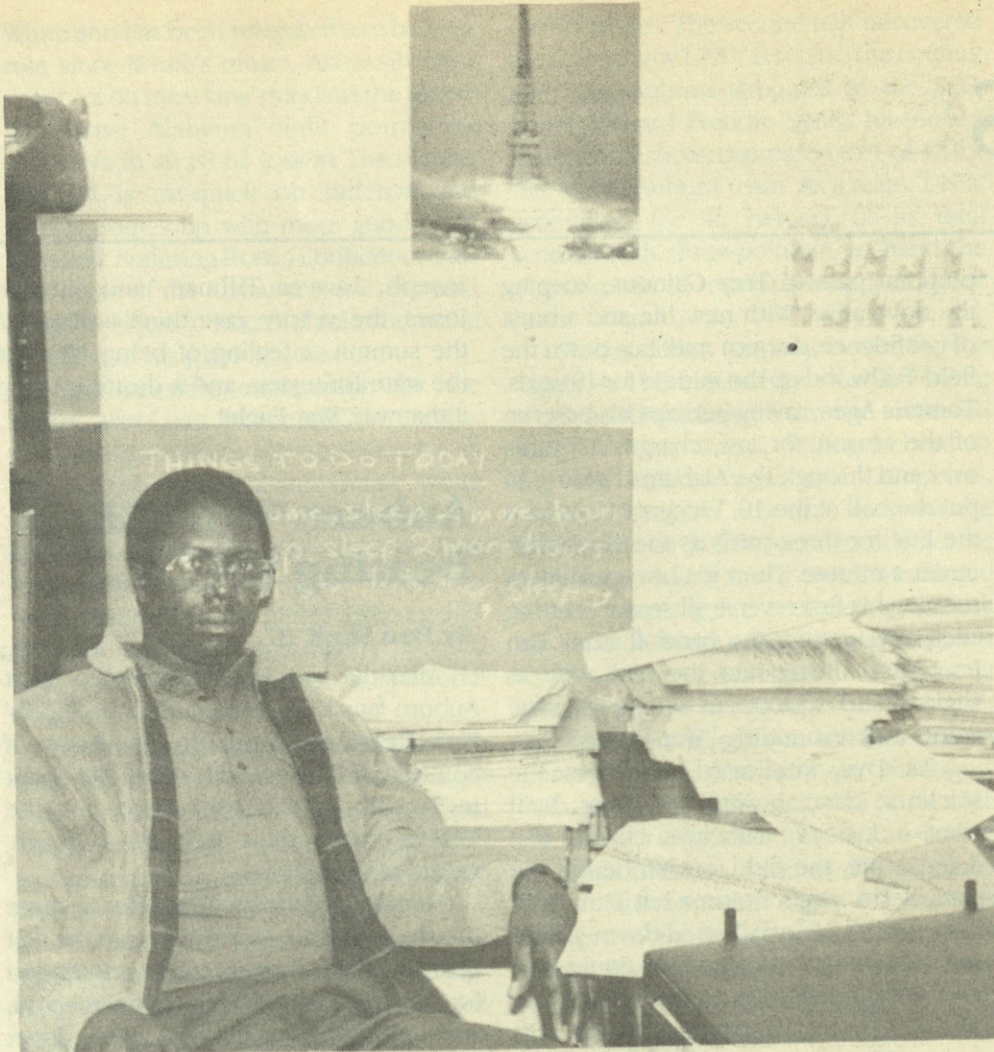

To be accepted on your own terms, Mr. Davis emphasizes, it is important to be competent in your subject matter and to display confidence in your ability. He takes his own advice to heart in the classroom, enthusiastically encouraging the expression of diverse viewpoints not only on civil rights and women's rights issues, but also on the traditional inner workings of our political system.

Each quarter his students are required to write a letter to their state senator or representative expressing a viewpoint on a timely topic of concern, to write a comparison/contrast paper based on meetings of two local governmental bodies, and to visit the state legislature (if in session during the quarter). Often, these experiences represent the first time students have witnessed their state and local government in action. "It opens up their eyes and makes them more aware of their political environment," he explains.

Mr. Davis knows whereof he speaks, having been involved in political affairs as an undergraduate. He served one summer as a senate aide to former Lt. Gov. George McMillan '66 with the Budget and Finance Committee and also has been actively involved with student government at AUM while working on a BA in English with minors in political science, criminal justice, and history.

The St. Louis, Mo., native attended Robert E. Lee High School in Montgomery while living with his grandmother. Following in the footsteps of his mother, who was active in civic organizations, he became involved in student life at AUM. He served as vice president of the SGA, a justice of the student court, director of political affairs for Black Student Affairs, and president of his fraternity, Alpha Phi Alpha. He helped coordinate plans for Black History Month at AUM, as well as at Auburn, when he came here two years ago to pursue a master's in political science.

He characterizes Auburn's efforts toward making the school attractive to minority students as "slow." After the school's leaders realized that there was a problem, he says, they pushed to do something about it. But, in his opinion, over the last year their enthusiasm has diminished. "They are making some

FROM TEACHING TO RESEARCH—Political science graduate student Alfred Davis took winter quarter off from teaching to research material for his thesis. effort, but I'm not convinced that they are doing all that they can at this point."

His suggestions for making the school more attractive to black students include restructuring the Office of Special Programs in order to install a separate coordinator to focus solely on the activities and needs of Auburn's black students. The Special Programs Office is doing a good job, he hastens to add, while commenting that he finds its limited staff spread too thin handling programs for a number of special student groups.

Mr. Davis would also like to see Auburn expend more effort recruiting those minority students who are college material though not in the top echelon of competitively sought prospects.

Addressing what he perceives as Auburn's image problem among black students, he suggests conducting exit interviews or surveys with black graduates to find out about their experiences at Auburn and to gather ideas for creating a better environment for the future. Along this line, Mr. Davis favors tapping Auburn's black alumni as recruiters and sources for scholarships aimed at minority students.

He does applaud the administration for doing something and likewise is proud of his contributions to the effort, as the former assistant director of minority affairs working with the SGA. "I was very pleased to have the opportunity to help get some projects started," he admitted, referring to the minority packet and Minority Weekend, both of which he helped develop in 1984 along with Dru Welch, assistant director of admissions. The recruitment packet is sent to prospective black freshmen, and Minority Weekend is held each fall to introduce minority students to the various aspects of Auburn student life.

Mr. Davis came to Auburn because it seemed the logical step—it was a larger school, was familiar and nearby, and offered a master's in political science. Initially, he worked as a research assistant in the Center for Governmental Services for several quarters. Then a teaching assistantship became available, and he feels fortunate to have been chosen for it.

His thesis topic, Auburn's Privatization of Waste Water Treatment, A Case Study, emerged as a result of working with political science professors Gerald Johnson and John Heilman on a waste water treatment project. The topic appealed to Mr. Davis because Auburn's city government is an innovator in the privatization of local governmental services. Privatization is the participation of the private sector in the production and/or delivery of a public service.

By analyzing the decision process that led Auburn to privatize, Mr. Davis would be in a position to establish guidelines for other communities to follow Auburn's lead. Only one other city—Chandler, Ariz.—explored this option at the same time Auburn first considered it. With the publication of his thesis, Mr. Davis hopes to add to the limited literature on the subject, by concentrating on the financial aspects, legalities involved, and the level of expertise available locally that are necessary to make the move feasible.

Mr. Davis hopes to finish his master's thesis and graduate spring quarter. Then he would like to teach, maybe at the junior college level, before working on a doctoral degree sometime in the future.

He admits to finding it very interesting to talk about his experiences at Auburn. Asked if he would make the decision to come here again, he responds, "I must honestly say I'm not sure. I would perhaps look around. I haven't been disappointed...but I've been surprised a little bit. I expected Auburn to be conservative, but I guess what I didn't expect was to find students so unaware politically of their environment. And often times, they don't appear to care to learn about it.... But other than that, it's been a very interesting experience."

Textile Engineers Seek Support for Department

A little over one year ago the Alabama Textile Education Foundation decided that the Auburn Department of Textile Engineering could use an intensified program of financial support. This decision followed surveys and national attention focused on the impact of textile imports on the domestic synthetic and natural fiber industry. The impact has been significant on the industry and somewhat demoralizing to some young people interested in careers in textiles. The industry is fighting back by improving efficiency, quality, and overall competitiveness of domestic operations. During this time, more than ever, the industry needs bright, energetic, competitive engineers, managers, and chemists from our textile department. Hiring of young professionals into the industry has actually increased considerably. Each graduate has received an average of several job offers, so additional students and state of the art equipment and programs are needed.

We were behind—as we looked around, we found that several other schools, North Carolina State, Georgia Tech, among them, had foreseen this problem and already rallied outside support to provide more information and incentive to those young people who are interested in futures in the American textile industry. Through their foundations, they had provided millions of dollars to the textile schools for scholarships and capital programs. They are providing incentive and the programs to close the technology and efficiency gap.

We recognized that not only was the area industry and textile department

Hallelujah! Auburn Does It in Reverse Stuns Bama 21-17

By Dan Shell '87

Emotions run the full spectrum during this annual 60-minute battle: love, hate, hope, despair, justice, vengeance, and, finally, ecstasy! Throw in two straight losses to the Tide. Throw in vicious rumors about Coach Pat Dye's family life and imminent departure to Texas. Throw in Alabama Coach Ray Perkins' questioning Dye's emotional and intestinal fortitude concerning the game of all games. And, while throwing, watch Jeff Burger complete 19 of 30 passes, including a pressure-packed 9-yard completion to Trey Gainous on fourth down with two minutes left. Finally, see Lawyer Tillman and the Auburn offense disdain the throw as Tillman runs a reverse for seven yards, a touchdown, and immortality with 32 seconds left in the game.

Alabama started the scoring late in the first quarter on a 2-yard Mike Shula touchdown pass, which Auburn answered on its next drive when Brent Fullwood, playing with an injured knee, sprinted through the Alabama defense from 18 yards out. With just under six minutes left in the half, Mike Shula connected on another touchdown pass, this one hotly contested by the Auburn sideline when it was obvious (and instant replay proved it) that wide receiver Al Bell had set an illegal pick on Auburn defenders Arthur Johnson and Chip Powell, taking them out of the play. After the half, it was more of the same. Auburn's offense sputtered during the third quarter while the Tide managed a field goal. Going into what the Bear used to call "our quarter," the Tigers were down by 10, 17-7.

Here's where the statistics and journalistic reportage fade into dreamy orange and blue snapshot memories of the Iron Bowl: Fullwood exploding through the Alabama line on an electrifying 26-yard touchdown run on the first play of the fourth quarter. 17-14. Auburn's defense, which gave up a season-high 340 yards on the ground, bending but not breaking, getting the ball back for the offense twice. Jeff Burger, leading Auburn to the brink midway through the fourth, only to be turned back by an interception in the end zone. Auburn's defense stopping Alabama cold, giving the Tigers the ball for the final time at the Auburn 33, with just under five minutes left.

From here the memories crystallize as the Tigers shake off the Florida and Georgia debacles and drive onward to their Birmingham date with destiny. Fullwood strains over the chains for a first down at the Auburn 43. A Burger pass to Walter Reeves puts the ball at the Alabama 49. A play later, and it's fourth and three with the game and state bragging rights on the line. Burger drops back, spots an opening, and fires a pinpoint pass to Trey Gainous, keeping the drive alive. With new life and a burst of confidence, Auburn marches down the field. Fullwood up the middle for 19 yards. Tommie Agee, saving perhaps his best run of the season for last, charges 11 yards over and through the Alabama defense to put the ball at the 10. Vincent Harris tries the line for three yards as the clock slips under a minute. Then it's Lawyer Tillman running his first reverse all season, cutting back after getting the handoff from Tim Jessie and diving into the end zone as Legion Field explodes in orange and blue colors and resounding "War Eagles!"

Pat Dye, vindicated, leaps on the sidelines, dancing with joy. Later, he'll plant a kiss on Tillman's cheek. The defense hits the field, remembering the pain of last year's no-time-left Van Tiffin field goal. After two batted-down passes and a Shula scramble, the Tide could only ask the impossible. Chip Powell is there, however, and the final pass attempt falls to the turf.

Auburn's offense, despite turning the ball over four times, rolled up 378 yards. Fullwood finished the game with 145 yards rushing, and although Alabama's Bobby Humphrey ran for 204 yards, Fullwood finished the season as the SEC's leading rusher with an average of 126.4 yards per game to Humphrey's 124.3. Tight end Walter Reeves and wide receiver Lawyer Tillman caught nine of Burger's 19 pass completions between them. Reeves' six catches, though for only 38 yards, proved crucial in opening up the Tide defense over the middle. Tillman, seemingly forgotten until his famous reverse run, turned in another solid day with 52 yards on 3 catches. Once again, Kurt Crain's 22 tackles headed an Auburn defense that bent all day, but stiffened close to the goal and in pressure situations. Noseguard Benji Roland contributed nine tackles, and converted cornerback-free safety Kevin Porter intercepted a Shula pass in the end zone right before halftime that kept the Tide from breaking the game wide open.

The win gave heart to Auburn fans everywhere, erasing the bad taste of the '84 and '85 games that were decided by two plays. Instead of 2-for-6 against the Crimson Tide, Pat Dye evened his record at 3-3. And, after two straight losses in Birmingham, the state balance of power shifted back closer to equal in the annual recruiting wars. But, mainly, the win revealed Pat Dye's class and the inherent integrity in his football program. Refusing to rise to Coach Perkins' verbal jibes before the game, Dye chose not to gloat afterward, preferring to confine his quotes to the elated emotions of his players, fans, and supporters.

For the players, the win gave a young offense confidence after being labeled as a group who couldn't complete the late, pressure-packed scoring drive. For the seniors such as Tommie Agee, Ben Tamburello, and Chip Powell, the win made their final year that much sweeter. And for younger players such as James Joseph, Lawyer Tillman, and Vincent Jones, the victory gave them a sense of the summit, a feeling of being kings of the state for a year, and a desire to keep it that way. War Eagle!

Auburn Wins Citrus Beating USC 16-7

By Dan Shell '87

After the Iron Bowl experience, most Auburn fans looked forward to the Tigers' New Year's date with the University of Southern California with relief. The giant in Tuscaloosa had been slain, and the Trojans, with their lame-duck coach, would be a pushover.

Not so in Orlando. The offense came out sluggish, and midway through the first quarter a Jeff Burger screen pass intended for Tommie Agee was tipped, intercepted, and returned 24 yards for a touchdown by USC's Marcus Cotton. However, that was the only Trojan score for the day as Auburn's defense continually stopped USC drives. Chip Powell intercepted a Rodney Peete pass after an Auburn punt, but the offense couldn't move the ball and had to give it back. On the Trojans' next possession Aundray Bruce nailed Peete for a sack, seemingly lighting a fire under the Tigers. The offense responded with an 80-yard drive, in which Brent Fullwood carried the ball nine times for 49 yards. The offense resorted to a pass inside the Trojan 10 as Jeff Burger executed a beautiful play-action fake, finding a wide-open Walter Reeves for a three-yard touchdown toss to tie the score.

On the ensuing USC possession, Aundray Bruce recorded his second sack of the day, slamming Peete to the ground and causing a fumble that Nate Hill pounced on to give the Tigers the ball deep in Trojan territory. Auburn then drove the ball in, with Fullwood covering the last four yards off tackle. Auburn went into the locker room with a 14-7 lead.

The third quarter turned the Citrus Bowl into the Bore Bowl as both teams fought futilely for the advantage on the rain-soaked grass in Orlando. Auburn's final score came in the fourth quarter when the Trojans were backed up inside their own 10. Defensive tackle Tracy Rocker and friends Benji Roland and Nate Hill corralled Peete in the end zone for a safety, giving Auburn a 16-7 lead. But things did get interesting at the end. With little more than two minutes to play, USC cornerback Louis Brock broke through to block a Brian Shulman punt and give the Trojans the ball at Auburn's seven. Then the defense rose to the occasion. Three straight passes put the ball at Auburn's one. In past glory days, USC would have given the ball to Charles White or Marcus Allen on the famous "student body left" play, but this is 1987. USC fullback Leroy Holt dove into the right side of the line and ran into cornerback Kevin Porter flying in from the outside. And, of course, there was linebacker Kurt Crain, as he has all year, solidly filling the hole for the final heroics of the season.

Citrus Bowl '87 was a day for defense. The tenacious Tigers held the Trojans to 152 yards in total offense as the vaunted Trojan horses finished with just 44 yards rushing. Kurt Crain led Auburn's defense with 10 tackles, but it was Aundray Bruce, with his three sacks and constant pressure on the quarterback, who earned defensive player of the game honors. Chip Powell contributed two interceptions, and Arthur Johnson and Russ Carreker came up with one apiece.

Brent Fullwood finished his Auburn career in fine form by being named the game's most valuable offensive player after he rushed for 152 yards and scored a touchdown. Jeff Burger, refusing to rattle after the touchdown interception, completed 8-of-18 passes for 90 yards. Overall, Auburn switched to its traditional conservative offense in the first half, preferring to let its fleet of running backs pound away at the Trojan defense.

Cagers Experience Up & Down Season

By Dan Shell '87

After breaking fast from the starting blocks in the 1986-87 season, Coach Sonny Smith's Tiger's are faltering against SEC opponents. Sporting a 13-8 record (6-6 in the Southeastern Conference) at press time, Auburn is tied for 6th in the SEC and has fallen out of the Top Twenty after rising as high as 5th in the nation earlier in the season in some polls.

Auburn began the season beating UAB 68-58 and started walloping an outclassed early schedule that included the likes of Armstrong State and Augusta College. After seven straight wins and before its first loss to the University of Texas-El Paso in the finals of the Sun Bowl Tournament, Auburn was playing much like the fifth best team in the nation. During the seven game winning streak, Auburn outscored its foes by an average score of 94-76. Since then, Auburn has a record of 6-8, and its average margin of victory has fallen to three, 74-71.

At first glance, the inferior competition at the beginning of the schedule might explain the Tigers' fall, but Coach Sonny Smith had warned the media that Auburn wasn't as good as some pollsters thought. However, minus one player this is the same team that finished as one of the top eight in the country last year. But the one lost starter, Chuck Person, Auburn's all-time leading scorer, represented more than 20 points per game and was the one man the Tigers could turn to to get the crucial, last-second bucket. In addition to the loss of Person, Auburn lost Gerald White, Auburn's all-time assist leader, for preseason practice and the early game after he injured his back in the summer. White returned to the lineup on December 17 against Augusta College amidst cheers from a sparse between quarters crowd, but the Gerald White that ran one of the best fast breaks this side of the NBA and helped Auburn to within one step of the magical Final Four hasn't been in the lineup yet.

Since this is the first basketball update for the 1986-87 season printed in the Alumnews, let's meet the players:

*Frank Ford, guard—Right now, he's emerged as the soul of the team. If anyone has come to replace Person's leadership, it's Ford. Although he plays guard, he's not afraid to get in under the basket and mix it up with the big men. At press time, he's averaging 13.8 points and 6.2 rebounds per game.

*Gerald White, guard—At this point, White hasn't returned to his top form of last year. At first, one noticed his quickness had suffered, but now, even though he's in better shape, his timing and shooting are off. Then, an ankle injury suffered against UNLV further hampered his progress. Also, Smith's bringing him directly into the starting lineup may have affected the chemistry of the team. White is averaging 5.6 points and 2.4 rebounds per game.

*Jeff Moore, center—After showing flashes of brilliance earlier in the season, Moore looks very ordinary and tentative against some of the other big men in the SEC such as Alabama's Derrick McKey and Vanderbilt's Will Perdue. Moore has a good shooting touch, but hasn't yet displayed the physicalness inside that Auburn needs. Beginning the second round of conference play, Moore is Auburn's top scorer and rebounder, with 18.3 and 9.6 respectively.

*Chris Morris, forward—One of the only two starters (Jones is the other) playing up to his last year's performance. Seemingly more mature after getting married over the summer, Morris continues to electrify Auburn's home crowds—and awe some hostile arenas—when he roars in on the break or catches an alley-oop and slams the ball home. His dunks are surpassed only by a former Auburn star: Charles Barkley. Morris is second on the team in scoring and rebounding with 14.5 points and 7.6 boards per game. He's also leading the team in free throw shooting, hitting 75 percent of his charity shots.

*Mike Jones, forward—Last year's AP pick as Freshman of the Year in the SEC began this season some 25 pounds overweight, prompting Coach Smith to issue an ultimatum telling Jones to "lose 20 or sit down." Jones lost his weight, regained his quickness, and is slowly adjusting to playing the low post. He's averaging 13 points and 6.8 rebounds per game.

*The Bench: Aundrae Davis, guard; Terrance Howard, guard:

*Aundrae Davis—Possibly the most talented player on the team, Davis can be "as good as he wants to be," according to Coach Smith. Davis comes off the bench looking to make something happen. Against Georgia he scored 11 second-half points to key an Auburn comeback; against Mississippi State he scored 14 points in 15 minutes, including 4-for-4 from three-point range. In fact, Davis leads Auburn in three-point shooting at 45 percent, hitting 18-of-40 shots.

*Terrance Howard—The forgotten man on Auburn's team. He began the season as starting point guard in place of Gerald

White and has been relegated to a backup role since White's return. Although right now he's on most fans' minds as the player who gave Alabama eight points on turnovers in an 88-82 loss in Tuscaloosa, Howard is cat-quick on defense and usually comes up with more good plays than bad. Suffering from a confidence loss as a result of the Alabama game, Howard needs to adjust to his relief role and make the most of his playing time.

One possible explanation for the Tigers' slow start in the SEC is the flu. On the night Auburn played Kentucky, all five starters were sick, and Gerald White and Mike Jones both had 100-plus temperatures. Result: a 63-60 homecourt loss to an inferior team. The conditions were replayed three nights later against Georgia, and the Tigers barely escaped with a 62-58 overtime win in Memorial Coliseum.

As the Tigers recuperated so did their play, and they followed with two straight wins over Mississippi State (66-52) and Tennessee (66-56). Auburn then traveled to Vanderbilt, where it started the game with an 11-2 burst only to get blown out, 91-75. From there the Tigers went to Tuscaloosa to face the number one SEC team and 13th nationally ranked Crimson Tide. After going into the locker room behind by 21 points at the half, the Tigers went to the fast break and a trapping zone defense to pull within three points late. However, the Tigers didn't get the breaks at the end and lost 88-82.

Breaking out of the slump on January 24, Auburn used the same trapping zone and fast break scheme to rout the Rebels of Ole Miss 88-52. Jeff Moore played up to his potential, scoring 23 points. But, then again, this was Ole Miss.

The following week was a tough one for the Tigers, as they had a road game at LSU, then returned home for back-to-back games with number one teams: number one in the SEC Florida, and number one in the nation University of Nevada-Las Vegas. For the mid-week game at LSU, Auburn went with the same script that has plagued the team all season—playing only 20 of the game's 40 minutes. Auburn fell behind by as many as 22 points in the first half, then fought back in the second to go ahead 57-56 with 12 minutes remaining. The game came down to the final 11 seconds. Jeff Moore had the final shot, the ball came off the rim, and time expired for Auburn with LSU ahead, 75-73.

The weekend made history for Auburn's program as the first ever nationally televised basketball game originated in Memorial Coliseum on Sunday, Feb. 1. But the high point of the weekend came Saturday, with the Florida Gators in town. For the first time all season, Auburn played two halves. Jeff Moore, overcoming his shyness under the goal, outplayed Florida's 7-foot center, Dwayne Schintzius, turning in a stellar 26-point 13-rebound game to pace the Tigers. Michael Jones and Chris Morris also played well, turning in 14 and 12 points, respectively, as the Tigers turned an 11-point halftime advantage into an 81-68 route by the end of the game. Enter the Runnin' (and boy did they) Rebels of UNLV. Auburn began the game well enough, but couldn't convert crucial early free throws. At halftime, Auburn was behind 60-49, having missed exactly 11 charity tosses. The second half uncovered the reason why UNLV is tops in the country and why Auburn struggles in the SEC. Rebel forward Freddie Banks hit 9-of-13 three-point shots, compared to 4-of-12 for the whole Auburn team. As a team, UNLV accounted for 40 percent of its total scoring with three-pointers, to hand the Tigers a 104-85 embarrassment on their home court.

Things didn't get any better for the Tigers in Lexington, Ky., the following week as they played from the same old script at Rupp Arena. Falling behind in the first half by more than 20 points, Auburn struggled, not able to work the ball inside to Jeff Moore. To add to the confusion, Coach Sonny Smith was forced to play "point guard roulette" as a result of Gerald White's ankle injury against UNLV. Johnny Lynn started the game at point, only to be replaced by Terrance Howard. The result was another furious comeback that came up short. Once again Auburn had a chance to win or tie with 16 seconds left, behind 73-71, and the ball at halfcourt. But Aundrae Davis' three-point attempt with eight seconds left glanced off the backboard, and Kentucky's James Blackmon delivered the final blow off a layup to put Auburn away, 75-71.

At press time Auburn stood at a crossroads in the SEC. Beginning the second round of league competition, Auburn's six SEC losses make it mathematically possible but highly unlikely for it to take the crown. Failing the title, Coach Smith's goals are a good seed in the SEC Tournament and a possible NCAA bid. Both goals mean winning basketball games, and to do that Auburn's Tigers must play consistently, as a team, for 40 minutes every game.

Nominees for Gilbert Athletic Award Again Being Sought

Auburn's Faculty Committee on Intercollegiate Athletics is seeking nominations for the Walter Gilbert Award. The Gilbert Award honors the late Walter Gilbert, Auburn's only three-time All-American and a Texaco executive before retiring and returning to Auburn in 1977, where he lived until his death in 1979.

The Gilbert Award is made to former athletes who have gone on to distinguish themselves and Auburn by superior performance in their fields, or by service to others, for 20 years or more. The award is presented only in years where there is a deserving nominee.

Anyone can submit a nomination. Nominations can be made to the Auburn Alumni Association, the Auburn Athletic Department, or the Committee on Intercollegiate Athletics, Dr. Joe Boland, Chairman 202 Ramsay Hall, Auburn University, AL 36849.

Previous Gilbert Award winners include retired Marine General Joe Stewart '37; retired Air Force General Thomas K. McGehee '37; Joel Eaves '37, University of Georgia athletic director emeritus; Dr. David Middleton '55, a physician; William A. Fickling '54, founder of Charter Medical Corp.; and Ted Ferreira '47, who has been instrumental in the growth of Little League Baseball.

under impact from outside forces, but that we were also behind our competitive schools in coming to grips with the problem. We knew Auburn had been behind before but hardly ever had we been beat in the final analysis.

So, a catchup program was started. A capital funds program was launched in 1984 aimed first at providing needed textile scholarships, and second to the extent needed, capital improvement funds.

This drive has proceeded well and through September 1986, $720,000 has been pledged. Auburn alumni, working throughout the country, have supported this drive through their company's foundations and personal gifts.

We are still short of the goal, however, and have committees working with suppliers, customers, foundations, and the textile companies to raise the additional needed funds. One textile company (West Point Pepperell) has, in addition to their corporate gift and generous support of personnel, offered to match dollar for dollar the cumulative gift from alumni up to $50,000 through December 1989.

The ATEF committees are preparing a 1987 initiative to communicate the overall effort to all Auburn alumni. We will be working to meet this challenge. Be prepared for our call. Let's get back in front where we belong. We need an additional $280,000. Auburn Alumni, here's your chance to respond. Let's put Auburn on top.

In the event you have not been contacted and would like additional information concerning this campaign, or would like to make a contribution, please contact Richmond Terry, WestPoint Pepperell, Box 71, West Point, Ga. 31833. (Phone 404 645-4420).

Football Festivities '86

The smell of frying hamburgers and charcoal lighter permeate the air. Orange and blue appear with great frequency. The marching band's drummers warm up in the distance. Fall breezes scatter leaves on the ground. Old friends gather for a few laughs and old stories. Ticket scalpers stand on street corners hawking their wares. Children form make-shift teams and argue over who will be the Bo Jackson of the team. And alumni and fans descend upon the campus for one brief day, parking wherever there is space, setting forth any and all forms of Auburn paraphernalia as if to say, "I'm Auburn's most devoted fan." Football in Auburn might bring to mind all these images and more. But now that the chilling winds of February have arrived, and football in Auburn is gone for another year, we would like to present a few reminders of a season gone by. Pictured here are a few people caught in the act of enjoying the festive atmosphere before the Georgia Tech, Cincinnati, and Georgia games.

POKER FACE?—Hilton Bowen '54 and Ron Duke '68 enjoy a game of cards before the football game as Ron's wife, Reba, offers Ron advice. Sitting in the background are Clif Capps '67 and Donna Gurley.

CRIMSON TIDE PRES SINGS AU FIGHT SONG—Alabama's Student Government Association President John Merrill carried off a difficult task with aplomb. Auburn's Iron Bowl victory brought him to Toomer's Corner where the conditions of a bet made with Auburn SGA President Robert Maund required that he don an Auburn sweatshirt and sing the Auburn fight song until he won the crowd's approval. Although he unabashedly forgot a few words on the first go-around, he did so well the second time that the crowd sang along with him.

program in education which will lead to a master's degree for students who have subject matter specialties rather than education degrees. As a part of an effort to improve the knowledge of Alabama's teachers, Auburn's Fifth Year program is looking for students with good grades in science and liberal arts curricula.

William L. Deaton, who joined the Auburn faculty in 1977, has been named associate dean for research and graduate studies for the College. Dr. Deaton had been acting associate dean for a year before being named to the position. He is responsible for all activities in the college related to research and graduate studies.

Dr. Deaton has been co-investigator on a number of major research contracts in the College of Education including the Alabama Career Incentive Program evaluation and a study of high school dropouts in the state. He was recently elected president of the Mid-South Educational Research Association.

The College of Education has Auburn's largest graduate enrollment with 484 students. Another 2,121 are undergraduates.

Men's, Women's Golf Teams

- LSU National—3rd
- Buckeye Classic—19th
- Alabama Intercollegiate—3rd (tie)
- Auburn/Alabama Classic—2nd
- Gator Invitational—8th (tie)
- Seminole Golf Classic—4th
- Imperial Lakes Golf Classic—20th (tie)

Women's golf coach Bud Marsee, saddled with a young team that hasn't finished higher than sixth in six tournaments this year, says a lack of concentration is hurting his team's chances. Pointing out muffed shots and missed putts, Marsee said his team will have to start shooting lower if it wants to finish higher.

Marsee is pleased with two of his young charges, though. According to him, Anne Katherine Jones and Susan Burgoon, both freshmen, are shooting well and will bolster the team's fortunes in the future.

At the recent TSU/Hudson Industries Invitational, Auburn finished the tournament with a three-day score of 953 (314-323-316) to finish seventh. South Carolina won the invitational with a score of 919. The Tigers will play again March 20 at the Illinois Spring Classic. Here are the tournament-by-tournament results for the women's golf team so far this season:

- Memphis Intercollegiate—8th
- Lady Tarheel—11th
- Tiger/Tide Intercollegiate—6th
- U.S. International—8th
- LSU Invitational—6th
- TSU/Hudson Industries Invitational—7th

For Your Information

Toni Tennille, A Day Game & Village Fair Make Perfect Trio

Advice for A-Day weekend: Come early, and stay late. May 1 and 2 are packed with interesting things to do as the Auburn Village Fair pairs up with A-Day activities to offer something for everyone.

Friday night, May 1, Toni Tennille '62, kicks off the weekend with two one-hour concerts staged in the Student Activity Building at 7 and 9 p.m. Miss Tennille will be backed by an all-star Yardbirds band (Auburn's resident jazz ensemble) and friends. Tickets cost $12.50 and will go on sale to the general public on April 1. Tickets may be obtained through the Auburn Chamber of Commerce, 116 Tichenor Ave., Auburn, Ala. 36830, or at the door if available. A major portion of the concert proceeds will go toward establishing the Toni Tennille Scholarship Fund for jazz studies in the Music Department.

Saturday morning activities start at 8 a.m. with the Sixth Annual Run, a 10-K race sponsored by Auburn and Opelika Road and Track Association (AORTA) and Alpha Phi Omega service fraternity. Proceeds from this event will aid in refurbishing War Eagle VI's aviary.

The Sixth Annual Auburn Village Fair is a day-long extravaganza featuring arts and crafts exhibits, entertainment, and food concessions spread out under the oaks of Samford Park. Entertainers being lined up include storytellers, cloggers, square dancers, blue grass bands, and country music singers. Children may enjoy activities planned especially for them, and kids of all ages may choose from a wide variety of foods to whet the appetite.

That evening, "Struttin' in the Street" will cap out the day's doin's. The street dance, billed as a 7 p.m. until... event, will feature the Auburn Knights band stationed along one section of Magnolia Avenue and square dancing on the opposite corner of the block.

The Auburn Village Fair is free, and everyone is encouraged to come join in the fun. The event is sponsored by The Auburn Arts Association, the Auburn Chamber of Commerce, the Auburn Downtown Merchants Association, and Auburn University.

Alumni Association To Offer Credit Card to Members

One of the benefits of membership in the Auburn Alumni Association will soon be the availability of a VISA or MasterCard (or both). At its February meeting the Alumni Association Board approved a plan to offer credit cards to members as a benefit of membership. After considering proposals of several in-state banks, the Alumni Association chose the program offered by Colonial Banc-Group as the most beneficial to alumni and to the Alumni Association.

Members of the Alumni Association will not pay an annual fee for the card, will have the choice of VISA or Mastercard (or both with a combined statement), and will have a low annual finance rate. In addition, Executive Director Jerry Smith points out that each time an alumnus uses his credit card, he'll be benefiting Auburn.

FIRST FORTENBERRY SCHOLARSHIP AWARDED—Charles N. Fortenberry, left, professor emeritus of political science, looks on while Gerald Johnson, head of the Political Science Department, presents a scholarship check in his name to freshman Suzanna E. Etheridge of Lilburn, Ga. She is the first recipient of the scholarship which was established to honor Dr. Fortenberry, professor and head of the Political Science Department from 1968 to 1979.

Applications for the credit cards will be mailed to alumni in late summer.

Non-Education Majors Can Enter Auburn's 5th Year Master's Program in June

Auburn is pioneering a fifth year master's program to provide professional teachers with a strong subject background. No one who has more than 20 quarter hours of professional education courses will be admitted to the fifth year program. Students will enter summer quarter and will devote full time to the program for four or five quarters, with one quarter spent in a classroom internship.

Entrance requirements include a B.S. or B.A.; completion of 90 quarter hours of general studies courses including humanities, social science, science, and mathematics; a grade point average (GPA) of at least 2.75 (on a 4 point scale); admission to the Auburn University Graduate School (based on a combination of grade point average and scores on the Graduate Record Exam (GRE)—for example a GPA of 2.75 would require combined GRE verbal and quantitative score of 920); GRE scores of less than 5 years old; a passing score on the English Language Proficiency Test; and a passing score on the content portion of the Alabama Initial Teacher Certification Test.

Graduates will receive an M.Ed. and be recommended for an A level teaching certificate.

Auburn Wants To Provide Courses For Your Execs

Successful organizations develop their key employees and potential leaders, giving them experience and training in a range of management skills—and Auburn wants to help.

The Center for Management and Executive Development (CMED) in the College of Business offers educational programs at all levels for professionals in business, industry, and government. If your company wants a particular seminar for a group of managers, CMED can provide it. Using Auburn faculty and outside consultants, CMED provides seminars, workshops, conferences, and short courses. Participants can find educational opportunities suitable for a career at any stage and suited to a general audience or a specific client.

For additional information about the programs available by contract with CMED, contact J. Don Flowers, Director, 205 Thach Hall, Auburn University, AL 36849. (Telephone 205-826-4012).

Alumni Association To Publish Alumni Directory

The Auburn Alumni Association has decided to publish a directory of its alumni. Scheduled for release in the summer of 1988, the directory will be available to alumni and will contain biographical information on the entire alumni body. In addition to class year listings, special sections will identify alumni by city, state, and country.

All Auburn alumni will be surveyed by the Bernard C. Harris Publishing Company, which will publish the directory for the Auburn Alumni Association.

Auburn Alumni Needed To Provide Help for Farm Crisis Program

Auburn graduates are being asked to volunteer to help Alabama farmers solve their financial problems. In 1986, the Alabama Legislature created the Alabama Farm Crisis and Transition Program Commission, which is seeking volunteers across the state willing to help farmers solve financial and personal problems. The Commission will train the volunteers and assign them to client farmers in their home area. Kim Yates, volunteer coordinator, notes that Auburn graduates will be the kind of volunteers the commission seeks: "professionals, dedicated to community service and willing to give their talents to understanding and helping farmers."

Volunteers will be trained to work with farm families who are experiencing financial and emotional stress. Volunteers will receive information on agricultural law, agricultural finance, farm management analysis, psychology, and social involvement, and then will be linked with other professionals involved with the Alabama Farm Crisis and Transition Program.

If you're interested in learning more about the program, or in volunteering, contact Dr. John Gamble, Agricultural Economic Administrator, Department of Agriculture and Industries, at the department's hotline number: 1-800-321-0000.
